"WHAT? ME QUIT SMOKING? I JUST STARTED!"

For whatever reason, your student may be smoking: pot, cigarettes, bidis, blunts. It could be that the tobacco companies continue to make smoking glamorous, attractive and affordable. "Buy one get one free," the ads shout out. Actually, nearly all first time smoking happens before high school graduation, according to the Centers for Disease Control. It could be that one of the parents smoke or smoked. Children from smoking families have a 75% chance of smoking themselves. When teens said they would quit within five years, a majority of them were still smoking. It's just that addictive.

Your teen needs to team up with you and a doctor in order to kick this nasty habit. It is worth your time and money to help your teen get through this problem. It even helps if several teens try to do this together but what you need to know most importantly: is trying to keep them from not starting if they haven't started yet. Prevention, prevention, prevention, education.

Visit any high school to see the smoking going on in parking lots or the bus stop or the businesses near campus. School officials have a lot going on and can't always monitor everyone. Try discussing with your teen the reasons why people are starting. But more importantly, try to talk to them about other issues: forced child labor in Malawi where kids as young as six pick tobacco for pennies a day and get sick handling the nicotine leaves. Mention deforestation from the multi-national tobacco conglomerates about how they use and destroy over 10% of the world's lumber to grow it, cure it, wrap it, ship it, advertise it. Mention dirty waterways from the billions of cigarette butts thrown on the ground and find their way to our rivers and oceans. Mention the tobacco industry's greed in addicting children, women and ethnic groups throughout the world.

If people stopped to think about this in this way, perhaps they would try to really cut down, quit, help someone else quit, help their parent quit, help a small child not start. The Oregon Quitline is a fantastic resource but isn't the only source to help. They can be reached at 1-800-QUIT-NOW or 1-877-2NO-FUME.

Ages potty-trained to 9 years are welcome and will be grouped according to age for appropriate activities. The eScrip program was introduced in 1999 and has distributed over $120 million to schools and youth organizations across the country. Wilson has already received a fair portion of those fundraising dollars and could get even more. Other local merchants and restaurants just need you to pay with a registered credit or debit card, like Burger King; New York NY; Boulevard Café and Happy Fortune and they will send a percentage of your purchases to Wilson in cash.
