Grading and Feedback

Whether intentional or unintentional, traditional grading practices prevent learning, raise students' stress levels, and contribute to racially biased outcomes.

To center the students' experience and develop equitable, anti-racist grading practices, I have divided my grading policy into two categories: work completion rate and narrative feedback.

Work Completion Rate (Student Effort)

The letter grade represents a student's work completion rate. Completing and submitting in-class reflections, participating in class discussions and the class discussion board, and completing major projects is how students can document their effort in class and increase their work completion rate.

The Grading Scale (subject to change)

- A = work completion rate above 75%
- B = work completion rate above 60%
- C = work completion rate above 50%
- Work completion rate below 50% may be considered a No Pass/F letter grade

For their letter grade, students need to:

- Write more than the minimum word count for essays and reflections
- Submit work with minimum quality for teacher feedback on English Language Arts skills.
- Make attempts to incorporate teacher and peer feedback into their work

Narrative Feedback

Quality assessment, feedback on students' knowledge and skills relating to English Language Arts, will be given through narrative feedback. In the narrative feedback, I will share my professional opinion on the students' academic strengths and share areas of growth that students can use to continue their learning.

Narrative Feedback Process

- Written narrative feedback will be given to students formally at least once every three weeks.
- I will describe three areas of strength and three areas for improvement relating to analysis, writing, critical thinking, and collaboration skills.
- I will post the written narrative feedback on canvas and send emails.

With this grading policy, I hope it lowers the amount of fear and anxiety students experience around grades. I hope it encourages students to take academic risks that are necessary to grow knowledge and develop skills. I hope it builds the habit of hard work because learning doesn't begin until students give their best effort.
